QUARTERLY/ANNUALLY INDIVIDUAL LETTER

delivered: end of quarter

02 How my support faded

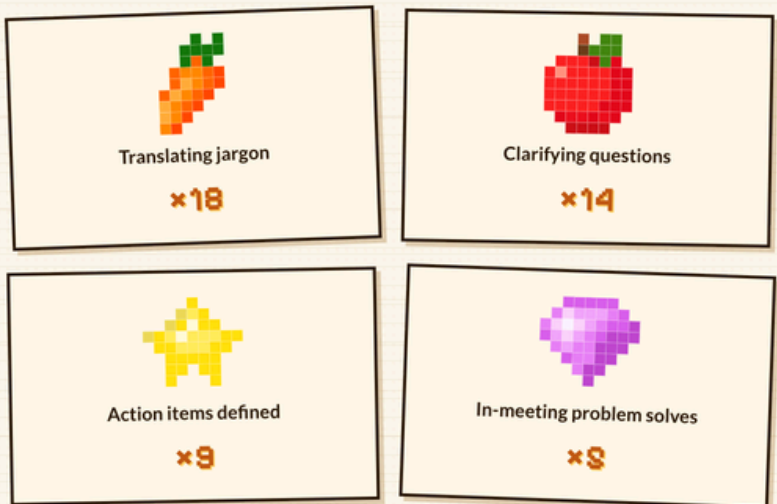

At the start of the quarter, when you wrote something vague, I'd give you a full correction and explain why it mattered. By the end, more than half the time you caught it on your own — I didn't have to say anything.

That last step is the goal. I'm supposed to get quieter.

04 Your treat collection

Every time you communicated more clearly, I noted it down as a treat. Here's what stacked up. 46 in total.

Carrot was your most-fed treat — translating jargon. (You picked that one as your goal at week one. You stuck the landing.)

07 The three things you said you wanted

You wrote these in the questionnaire at week one. I held onto them.

THE SKILL YOU WANTED TO REINFORCE

Translating jargon

Earned 18 carrots — your most-fed treat by 4x.

HOW YOU WANTED FEEDBACK TO LAND

Identifying hidden gaps

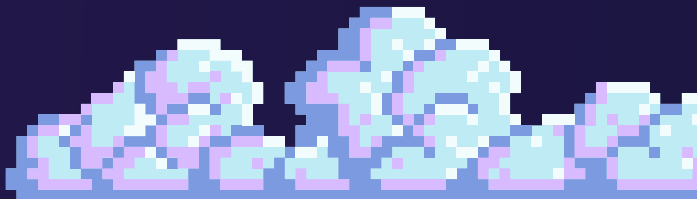

Of 47 nudges I gave, you caught 78% before sending.

THE OUTCOME YOU HOPED FOR

Faster alignment, less rework

Roughly 6.4 hours of rework you didn't have to do this quarter.

LIMITATION

- Synchronize meeting analysis: tagging and labeling accuracy
- Measurement time span: can we drive long-term behavioral change
- Designed for groups: hard to get an actual team to playtest
- Team experience feedback: different opinions on the “feeding” session

FUTURE PLAN

- Expand User Testing in Real Settings: Evaluate real-time accuracy and usability
 - Partner with companies: Measure long-term impact and learning
 - Collect user feedback: Capture both team and individual insights

THANK YOU!
